Most frequent hosts

How many times each country has hosted, ranked separately per competition. Unlike the title totals above, this does not group West Germany under Germany - hosting is a fact about a specific edition, not a sporting-successor question, so West Germany (1974 FIFA World Cup, EURO 1988) and Germany (2006 FIFA World Cup, EURO 2024) are kept distinct. A co-hosted edition (e.g. "Belgium and Netherlands") counts as one combined host, the same way the host filter on each competition page already treats it.

Titles won on home soil

Editions where the champion is also that edition's host, ranked by count - generated by matching each table's own Winner and Host columns row by row, not hand-picked trivia. A co-hosted edition's combined host label (e.g. "Canada, Mexico and United States") only counts as a home-soil win for an exact match, so a single co-host that goes on to win is not counted here - Spain's 2026 FIFA World Cup title, with the tournament co-hosted by three other countries, is a real example. Grouped the same way "Most successful teams" groups West Germany under Germany.

Back-to-back champions

Every run of two or more consecutive editions won by the same team, player, or tied group of players - generated from the same tables as everything else on this page, not hand-picked trivia. A placeholder year with no result (the 2020 Ballon d'Or) breaks a streak spanning it, and West Germany/Germany are kept distinct here too, the same way "Most frequent hosts" above does.

Nearly champions

Teams that have reached a final - generated from each table's own "Runner-up" column - but have never actually won the competition, ranked by runner-up count. A team is dropped from this list the moment it wins even once, so an earlier final loss is not "credited" to a team that went on to lift the trophy later. Grouped the same way "Most successful teams" groups West Germany under Germany.

Nearly finalists

Teams that have reached a semifinal - a "Third", "Fourth", or "Other semifinalist" finish, generated from each table's own columns for those - but have never actually reached a final, ranked by semifinal count. A team is dropped from this list the moment it reaches any final, whether it goes on to win or not. Copa América's editions before its knockout-final era have no separate third-place match, so they contribute no entries here. Grouped the same way "Most successful teams" groups West Germany under Germany.

Longest wait between titles

For every team, player or tied group with at least two titles, the biggest calendar-year gap between two of their wins - generated from the same title years as "Most successful teams" above, not hand-picked trivia. The opposite question from "Back-to-back champions": that section finds the shortest possible gap (the very next edition); this one finds the longest gap in a title holder's own record. Grouped the same way "Most successful teams" groups West Germany under Germany.

Biggest final wins

Every final ranked by goal margin, generated straight from each table's own "Final" score line - a penalty shootout only ever follows a draw, so a final decided on penalties correctly ranks at the bottom with a margin of 0 rather than the penalty score being counted as a goal difference. Copa América's source table has no "Final" score column, so it is not ranked here (see its own page for match-by-match detail where available).

How historical nation names are handled

Edition tables and champions timelines above always keep the name a team competed under at the time (e.g. "West Germany", "Soviet Union", "Czechoslovakia", "Yugoslavia") - history is never rewritten. Only thegenerated title totals in "Most successful teams" apply a small, explicit set of aggregation rules:

- West Germany is grouped under Germany in title totals only, shown as "Germany (incl. West Germany)" - the one sporting-successor case the source content itself groups.

- Soviet Union and Russia are not merged. They are treated as distinct entries with separate title counts.
- Czechoslovakia and Czech Republic/Czechia are not mergedwithout an explicit editorial rule; today there is none, so each counts separately.
- Yugoslavia's results stay labeled as Yugoslavia and are not attributed to any of its successor states.
