What each competition page gives you

-  A responsive edition-by-edition table that never overflows on a phone.
-  Filter by winner, year, host and team, with a shareable link for any view.
-  A champions summary generated straight from the table.
-  Source links and a visible "last reviewed" date.
-  Clean print output on A4 landscape, plus light and dark themes.

Want champions timelines and title rankings across every competition on one page? See Records and Timelines.

Compare two national teams head-to-head - titles, runner-up and semifinal finishes across all four competitions.

Or test what you know with the Family Quiz, generated from these same tables.

How to use the reference

Each competition page contains:

- a concise introduction;
- a complete or near-complete edition-by-edition table;
- historical notes explaining format changes;
- a champions summary;
- memorable facts;
- links to primary sources.

Important historical naming note

National teams and states have changed over time. This project generally records the name used during the tournament, while summary statistics may group sporting successors where that is conventional. Examples include West Germany/Germany, Soviet Union/Russia, and Czechoslovakia/Czechia. The website should explain these choices rather than pretending that political and sporting continuity is always simple.
